RESEARCH FOCUS

PhD candidate researching the intersections of climate, health, and community in Africa. My work examines how extreme temperatures, flood and disaster exposure, and economic precarity—including the intergenerational financial burden known as the “Black Tax”—shape mental health and well-being outcomes. I combine quantitative rigour (causal and spatial econometrics) with qualitative depth. My background spans agricultural economics, migration research, and development practice across Africa and Europe.

Nationality: Nigerian | Languages: English and Yoruba (Native), French (A1), Italian (A2)
